Terry,

Coast Guard does not have authority over this area.

Thanks,

Ted

Met briefly with the park manager Jeff Rasmussen today. He received the map which doesn't provide the scale needed to determine any land infringement. His concerns are of course the noise being within hearing distance or closer of the Painted Rock camp ground. Apparently, they are making significant improvements on the property. Mitigation, I could only suggest mounding and plantings if deemed necessary. We don't have a sense of frequency of trains--to and from the unloading area; or the optimum time of day that would cause the least problem for the park.

It appears there will be a crossing of reservoir at the narrow neck southeast of the boatramp. Piling will be considered navigational hazards, and will have to be approved by our boating coordinator and possible the Coast Guard. I don't have a sense of how much of problem, if any, that will be.

Our park entrance road will be breached by the railroad, also resulting in a public hazard. Visitation ranges from 115,000 to >140,000 per year. I doubt, with the drought, visitation will be maintained. It is an early season and late season lake for boating and fishing; and itinerant camping and day use. We reserve the right to review the final alignment plans. If there any impacts on the federal Land & Water Conservation fund site near Painted Rocks, they will have to be mitigated at current market value. Mr. Lyle Bennett (Grants Coordinator) and the National Park Service will make those judgements in the event there is a conversion of use (downgrade of public recreation access and use) under P.L. 88-578, section 6(f).
